PRELIMINARY NOTICE.

THE publication of the first instalment of this work calls for a few words of explanation. The late Dr. Bosworth devoted much time and labour to the preparation of a second edition of his Dictionary, but at the time of his death only the 288 pages which form Part I of the present issue had been finally revised by him. So much progress, however, had been made with some succeeding sheets that it would have been a matter of considerable difficulty to make any but slight alterations in them. Consequently, after careful consideration, it was thought better to leave unchanged in the text certain points which would have involved extensive modifications, and, when the work should be complete, to note such in the Preface or Appendix. Only one or two of them will be mentioned here. In the first place, in the arrangement of the words it might have been well to deviate from the method followed in the first edition, e.g. to take æ separately and not to treat it as if it were ae; and to separate the short from the long vowels. That the plan followed in the latter case is not, however, without its convenience in practice, seems to have been recognised by Grein, who, in the second volume of his Poetical Dictionary, employs it instead of separating short vowels from long as he had done in Vol. I; and the accent, it may be thought, distinguishes sufficiently between a, á, &c. Again, words will be found in which Dr. Bosworth differs from other scholars in regard to the character of a vowel, e.g. he divides for into for and fór, while at the same time he has given cognate forms which shew that such a distinction is not justified. Though in these and other instances alterations might be desirable, yet the work, as it stood, contained, in the number of passages it offered to illustrate the meanings of words and in other respects, so much material which it is the object of a Dictionary to furnish, that deficiencies in the directions indicated above, it was thought, did not so seriously detract from its value as to make change absolutely necessary. Further, Dr. Bosworth's death has made it impossible to confer with him on points where doubt or difference of opinion might arise; and it was with some hesitation, more especially at first, that conclusions at which he had arrived, though they might not gain assent, were set aside. The work, no doubt, admits of improvement; but those who are best able to detect its shortcomings will be best able to appreciate the difficulties attending such a compilation; and it may be expected that at least English scholars will not judge too severely one whose zeal for the study of English was proved by his attempt to compile an Anglo-Saxon Dictionary, and by his foundation of the Anglo-Saxon Chair in the University of Cambridge.

One other point remains to be mentioned—the length of time between Dr. Bosworth's death and the appearance of this portion of the work he had begun. It was some years before the labour, which his death had interrupted, was resumed; and it was then found that the MS. was so incomplete that in many parts little had been added to the first edition. The work to be done, therefore, was not merely to prepare for the press material collected by Dr. Bosworth, but rather to get together fresh matter; a work in which rapid progress was at least not easy. Omissions and errors will certainly be found, and the Editor will be grateful to those who, when using the Dictionary, may notice such and point them out to him.

EXPLANATION OF THE PRINCIPAL CONTRACTIONS.

PREFACE.

WITH the issue of the last part of this work comes the necessity for some additions to the Preliminary Notice that accompanied Parts I and II. In that Notice it was mentioned that Dr. Bosworth's MS. for so much of the Dictionary as was contained in Part II was incomplete, and a similar remark applies with more force to the succeeding parts: little, indeed, was added in the MS. to what was already contained in the previous edition. If with corresponding parts of this previous edition the later part of the present one be compared, it will be seen that much had to be done in order to get together the additional material that finds its place in the new work. As the editor could not devote his time exclusively to the Dictionary, the length of the interval between the date of appearance of Part II and that of Part IV may seem not inexcusably great. It has, however, been so great that in some respects alterations have occurred in matters with which the Dictionary is concerned. Fresh material has been brought to light, or old material has been brought forth in more accessible form; the views on many points connected with the language that are now held, are not those of fifteen years ago, and there will be certainly some points in work done fifteen years ago that now will need revision. There will also be other points that need revision, but which cannot plead this excuse: mistakes and omissions, to some extent, are almost inevitable. Revision required under one or other head will be attempted in a supplement, which will be prepared as soon as possible.

In the course of the work some alterations have been made in the plan adopted by Dr. Bosworth. One of the difficulties connected with the cataloguing of English words preserved in works written before 1100 is due to the variety of forms which a word may take according to the time at which, or the locality in which, the MS. where it occurs was written. The Old-English specimens are scattered over centuries, and belong to different parts of England; naturally the form of a word is not always the same in the earlier and in the later specimen of the same locality, or in the contemporary specimens of different localities. In the earlier part of the Dictionary the different forms of a word are given separately, in the later part they are collected under a single form; e.g. in the former case words having the mutation of ea may appear under each of the forms which the varieties of that mutation (ē, ī, ē, ī) admit of, in the latter one form alone (ī) is given. Slight alterations, too, will be found noted in the list of references.

With regard to the marks used to distinguish difference in the vowels it may be noticed that ea, eo are employed in all cases where the short ea, eo are not meant, e.g. sceóp, Goth. skóp, has the same symbols as leóf, Goth. liubs, etc.

My thanks are due to Professor Skeat for the readiness which he has always shown to answer an appeal for help in a difficulty; to Professor Kluge and to Professor Heyne for very helpful criticism of the earlier parts of the Dictionary. To the former I am indebted not only for pointing out omissions, but for the assistance he has given in remedying them. He very kindly sent me a copy of the glosses cited under the abbreviation Germ., and further gave the Delegates of the University Press the opportunity, which they accepted of acquiring a collection of Anglo-Saxon words that he had made. These words were drawn for the most part from sources already utilized for the Dictionary, but it was an advantage to have even the same material noted by another. As an example of this it may be remarked that between thirty and forty of the passages cited under S were taken from Professor Kluge's notes, and the number would have been larger had not, as already stated, Professor Kluge's criticism called attention to omissions in the earlier part of the work. To the late Dr. Grein my obligations are very great. He has done so much to remove the difficulties of one of the most difficult parts of the vocabulary—the poetical—that he has earned the gratitude of every one who attempts to work in the same field as the author of the Sprachschatz der Angelsächsischen Dichter.

In conclusion, it may not be out of place to refer to some of the difficulties which are met with in an attempt to compile an Anglo-Saxon Dictionary. The Anglo-Saxon remains are varied in respect to the subjects of which they treat, and the technical terms peculiar to some of these subjects, e.g. law, require the knowledge of a specialist. The poetical vocabulary, again, as a part of the language almost lost in later times presents many difficulties. Even where at first sight it might seem that the solution of difficulties would be most certainly furnished—in the case of glosses to Latin words—the expectation is not always realized, and at times the gloss is the only authority for both the English and the Latin word. And throughout there is the difficulty of realizing the condition of those who used the language and thus of appreciating the significance of the language they used. It is hoped, however, that the numerous citations given under many words, by shewing the actual use of those words, may help to the appreciation of their significance, and so supplement the often necessarily imperfect explanations afforded by the Modern English words that are used as the nearest equivalents to the old forms. Further, English philology has become so extensive a study that to keep pace with its developments is a task that might occupy so much time as to leave comparatively little for other work. To compile an Anglo-Saxon Dictionary calls for so much in the compiler that some leniency towards shortcomings may perhaps be looked for by any one who attempts the labour.

EXPLANATION OF REFERENCES.

IN the following list a want of uniformity may be noticed in the case of some of the contractions used. This is due partly to modifications of Dr. Bosworth's forms, which it seemed convenient to make; partly to different conditions in respect to texts cited, which have been brought about while the work was in progress: some texts, that existed in MS. only, have been printed; of others, that were already printed, new editions have appeared, which were more convenient to refer to than were the old. Cross references are given below in these cases. Double references are given to passages cited from the poetry, to English editions and to Grein's Bibliothek der Angelsächsischen Poesie; in the later the contractions used are those to be found in Grein's Lexicon, and they are given together at the end of this list.

Where a reference to any citation consists of more than one part (e.g. Bt. —; Fox —), the several parts are separated by a semi-colon: where after a citation several references are given, these are separated by a colon.

When consecutive citations are taken from the same work the full reference is given only with the first (e.g. Bt. is not repeated where consecutive citations are taken from Boethius; or if the reference be of one part, e.g. Nar. —, the Nar. is not repeated).

A. It is not necessary to speak of the form of what are often called Anglo-Saxon letters, as all Teutonic, Celtic, and Latin manuscripts of the same age are written in letters of the same form. There is one exception: the Anglo-Saxons had, with great propriety, two different letters for the two distinct sounds of our th: the hard þ in thin and sooth, and the soft ð in thine and soothe, vide þ, p. 2. The indigenous Pagan alphabet of our Anglo-Saxon forefathers, called Runes, it must be particularly observed, not only represents our letters, but the names of the letters are significant. The Runes are chiefly formed by straight lines to be easily carved on wood or stone. For instance, the Rune ſc æc is not only found in inscriptions on wood and stone, but in Anglo-Saxon MSS. and printed books. In manuscripts and in books, it sometimes denotes the letter a; and, at other times, the oak, from its Anglo-Saxon name, æc the oak. v. ÆC, and RÛN.

B. The short or unaccented Anglo-Saxon a is contained in the following words, which are represented by modern English terms of the same import, having the sound of a in man: as Can, man, span, hand, land, sand, camp, dranc, etc. 2. The short a is often found in the final syllables of inflections, -a, -an, -as, -aþ, etc. It generally appears in the radix before a doubled consonant, as swamm a fungus, wann wan; or two different consonants, as mp, mb, nt, nc, ng, etc.—Camp, lamb, plante, dranc, lang, etc. 3. The radical short a can only stand before a single consonant and st, sc, when this single consonant and these double letters are again followed, in the inflections or formative syllables, by a, o, u in nouns; and by a, o, u, e in adjectives; and a, o, u, and ia in verbs; as Dagas, daga from dæg, hwalas from hwæl, fatu from fæt, gæstas from gæst, ascas from æsc; adj. Smales, smale, smalost, smalu, from smæl small; Lates, latu, latost, from læt late: Stapan, faran, starian, wafian. Grimm's Deut. Gram. vol. i. p. 223, 2nd edit. 1822. In other cases, the short or unaccented æ is used instead of a. See Æ in its alphabetical order.

4. The remarks in 3. are of great importance in declining words, for monosyllables, ending in a single consonant, in st or sc, change the æ into a, whenever the consonant or consonants are followed by a, o, u in nouns, and a, o, u, e in adjectives, vide Æ. 5. It must be remembered then, that a short a cannot stand in a word (1) when it ends in a single consonant, that is, when no inflections of a, o, u in nouns follow; as in Stæf, fræt: (2) when in nouns a single consonant is followed by e; as Stæfes, stæfe, wæter: (3) when the word has any other double consonants besides st, sc, though followed by a, o, u; as Cræft, cræfta, ægru n. pl. of æg: (4) in contracted words, when æ is not in the last syllable; as Æcer, pl. æceras, æcerum, contracted æcras, æcrum; wæpen, pl. wæpenu; mægen, pl. mægenu, contracted wæpnu, and mægnu. 6. Though I have given in C. 3. the reasons, which Grimm assigns for making the prefixed a, long, I believe it is generally short in A. Sax. as in Eng. a-bide = A. Sax. a-bidan = bidan, so a-cende = cende:—Ic todæg cende [cende Surt; acende Spl. 1; Th.] de ego hodie genui te, Ps. Spl. 2, 7. A-beran = beran to bear:—Hefige byrdyna man aberan ne mæg a man is not able to bear heavy burdens, Mt. Bos. 23, 4. Ne bere ge sacc nolite portare sacculum, Lk. Bos. 10, 4. A-biddan = biddan to ask, pray:—Abiddaþ [biddaþ Cott.] hine pray to him, Bt. 42; Fox 258, 21. Ic bidde ðe, Drihten I pray to thee, Lord, Gen. 19, 18. It is evident by these examples that words have the same meaning with and without the prefixed a: this a—not prominent or long, and therefore this prefix is left unaccented in this Dictionary.

7. a-prefixed, sometimes denotes Negation, deterioration, or opposition, as From, out, away; thus awendan to turn from, subvert, from wendan to turn; amöd out of or without mind, mad; adön to do away, banish, composed of a from, dön to do, vide Æ. The prefixed a—does not always appear to alter the signification: in this case it is generally omitted in modern English words derived immediately from Saxon,—thus, Aberan to bear; abrecan to break; abitān to bite. The prefixed a—, in such cases, seems to add some little force or intensity to the original signification of the word to which it is joined,—thus, færan to make afraid; terrere: a-færan to terrify, dismay, astound; exterrere, perterrere, consternare, stupefacere.

C. The long Anglo-Saxon ā is accented, and words containing this long or accented ā are now represented by English terms, with the vowel sounded like o in no and bone. The following words have either the same or an analogous meaning, both in English and Anglo-Saxon: Hām home, ān one, bān bone, hān hone, stān stone, sār sore, rāp rope, lār lore, gāst ghost, wrāt wrote. Sometimes the accented or long ā is represented in English by oa; as Āc an oak, gād a goad, lād load, rād road, brād broad, fām foam, lām loam, sāpe soap, ār oar, bār boar, hār hoar, bāt boat, gāt goat, āta oat, āþ oath, lāþ loath. Occasionally ā becomes oe in English; as Dā a doe, fā a foe, tā toe, wā woe; but the oe, in these words, has the sound of o in no. The same may be said of oa in oak, goad. Hence it appears that the Anglo-Saxon ā is represented by the modern English o, oa, and oe, which have the sound of o in no and bone; as Rād rode (p. of ride), rād a road, and dā, a doe. Deut. Gram. von Jacob Grimm, vol. i. pp. 358, 397, 398, 3rd edit. 1840.

2. The long ā is often changed into æ; as Lār lore, lēran to teach, ān one, ænig any. 3. The following is a precise summary from Grimm of the prefixed ā—long or accented. The prefixed ā is long because it is a contraction and represents the preposition æf of, off, from, away, out of, or the preposition on, in, upon, into, or as the Lat. in and Eng. un; as ā-dūne for æf-dūne, ā-wendian for æf-wendian, ā-drædan for on-drædan, ā-gean for on-gean, ā-týnan to unshut, open, Ps. Spl. 38, 13, for on-týnan, un-týnan to open. Ā, as an inseparable particle, is long because it represents the inseparable prefixed particles ar, ur, ir, in O. H. Ger. and O. Sax. commonly expressing the meaning of the Latin prepositions ab, ex, ad, etc.: A. Sax. ā-hebban, O. H. Ger. ur-hefan elevere; A. Sax. ā-fyllan, O. H. Ger. ar-fullan implere; A. Sax. ā-beran, O. H. Ger. ar-peran ferre, efferre; A. Sax. ā-scinan, O. H. Ger. ir-scinan clarescere. The peculiar force which this particle imparts to different verbs may correspond (1) to the Latin ex out, as ā-gangan to go out; exire; (2) to the English up, as ā-hleápan to leap up; exsilire: ā-fyllan to fill up; implere: (3) it expresses the idea of an origin, becoming, growing, ā-blacian to blacken, to become black; ā-heardian to grow hard: (4) it corresponds to the Latin re, as ā-geban reddere, ā-lōsian redimere, ā-sēcan requirere: (5) it is often used merely to render a verb transitive, or to impart a greater force to the transitive meaning of the simple verb,—ā-beódan offerre, ā-ceapian emere, ā-leccan ponere, ā-sleán occidere: (6) it is used with intransitive verbs, where it has hardly any meaning, unless it suggests the commencement or beginning of the action, as ā-hleahan ridere, ā-sweltan mori: (7) it expresses the end, aim, or purpose of an action, as ā-dōmian condemnare, ā-biddan deprecari, ā-wirþan perire. But, after all, it must be borne in mind, that the various shades of its meaning are innumerable, and that, even in one and the same compound, it often assumes different meanings. For further illustration we must therefore refer to the compounds in which it occurs, Grm. ii. 818–832. I have, in justice to Grimm, given his motives for marking the prefixed ā—long: I believe, however, it is short. See B. 6.

-a, affixed to words, denotes A person, an agent, or actor, hence, All nouns ending in a are masculine, and make the gen. in an; as from Cum come [thou], cuma a person who comes, or a guest: Swic deceive [thou], swica a traitor: Worht wrought, wyrhta a workman, wright: Fōregeng foregoing, fōregenga a foregoer: Beád or gebéd a supplication, praying, beáda a person who supplicates or prays: Bytl a beetle or hammer, bytla a hammerer, builder. Some abstract nouns, and words denoting inanimate things, end in -a; and these words, having the same declension as those which signify Persons or actors, are masculine; as Hlisa, an; m. fame: Tima, an; m. time: Lichama, an; m. a body: Stecorra, an; m. a star: Gewuna, an; m. a custom, habit.

abbad, abbod, abbud, abbot, es; m.: abboda, an; m. I. an abbot; abbās, the title of the male superior of certain religious establishments, thence called abbays. The word abbot appears to have been, at first, applied to any member of the clerical order, just as the French Père and English Father. In the earliest age of monastic institutions the monks were not even priests; they were merely religious persons, who retired from the world to live in common, and the abbot was one of their number, whom they elected to preside over the association. In regard to general ecclesiastical discipline, all these communities were at this early time subject to the bishop of the diocese, and even to the pastor of the parochial district within the bounds of which they were established. At length it began to be usual for the abbot to be in orders; and since the sixth century monks generally have been priests. In point of dignity an abbot is generally next to a bishop. A minute account of the different descriptions of abbots may be found in Du Cange's Glossary, and in Carpentier's supplement to that work:—Se ārwurda abbad Albinus the reverend abbot Albinus, Bd. pref. a-dylf effodit, Ps. Th. 7, 15, = a-dealf; p. of a-delfan, q. v.

Æ. The short or unaccented Anglo-Saxon æ has a sound like ai in main and fairy, as appears from these cognate words:—Wæl wail, brædan to braid, nægel a nail, dæg, spær, læt, snæce, mæst, æsp, bær, etc.

2. The short or unaccented æ stands only (1) before a single consonant; as Stæf, hwæl, dæg; (2) a single consonant followed by e in nouns; Stæfes, stæfe, hwæles, dæges, wæter, fæder, æcer; (3) or before st, sc, fn, ft; Gæst, æsc, hræfn, craeft; (4) before pp, bb, tt, cc, ss; Æppel, craebba, hæbbæn, fætte, fættes, wraecca, næsse; (5) before double consonants, arising from the inflection of monosyllabic adjectives:—Lætnæ, lætre, lætra, from læt late; hwætne, hwætre, hwætra from hwæt quick.

3. In the declension of monosyllabic nouns and adjectives, e is rejected from the short or unaccented æ, and becomes a, when a single consonant, or st, sc, is followed by a, o, u in nouns, and by a, o, u, e in adjectives; as Stæf, pl. stafas, g. stafa, d. stafum; hwæl, pl. hwalas; dæg, pl. dagas. adj. Læt late; g. m. n. lates; d. latum; se lata the late; latost, latemest, latest: Smæl small; g. m. n. smales; d. smalum; se smala the small, etc. See short a in B. 3, p. 1, col. 1.

4. æ, prefixed to words, like a-, often denotes A negative, deteriorating or opposite signification, as From, away, out, without, etc. Like a, ge, etc. æ is sometimes prefixed to perfect tenses and perfect participles and other words without any perceptible alteration in the sense; as Cēled, æ-cēled cooled. 5. The Anglo-Saxon Rune for æ is Æ, which is also put for æsc an ash-tree, the name of the letter. v. æsc.

Æ. The long or accented æ has the sound of ea in meat, sea. The æ is found in the following words, which are represented by English terms of the same signification, having ea sounded as in deal, fear: Dæl, fær, dræd, lædan, brædo, hæto, hwæte, hæþ, hæden, clæne, læne, sæ, ær, hælan, læran, tæcan, tæsan, tæsel, wæpen, etc.

2. The æ is known to be long, and therefore accented, when in monosyllables, assuming another syllable in declining, æ is found before a single consonant or st, sc, and followed in nouns by a, o, u, and in adjectives by a, o, u, or e; as Blæda fruits; blædum; Dwæes dull; g. m. dwæses. The æ is often changed into ā; as Stānen stony, stān a stone; lær, lār lore.

year [A. D. 897], the king [Alfred] commanded his men to go to Wight ... They then took two of the ships, and slew the men ... In the same summer, no less than twenty ships, with men and everything [of the Danes], perished on the south coast, Chr. 897; Th. 177, 5, col. 2—179, 3, col. 2. A. D. 901, Hēr gefōr Ælfred cyning vii Kf Nouembris ... and ðā fēng Eadweard, his sunu to rice here died king Alfred, on the twenty-sixth of October ... and then Edward [the Elder], his son, succeeded to the kingdom, Chr. 901; Th. 179, 14–18, col. 2.

II. Though the talents and energy of Alfred were chiefly occupied in subduing the Danes, and in confirming his kingdom, he availed himself of the short intervals of peace to read and write much. He selected the books best adapted for his people, and translated them from Latin into Anglo-Saxon. In translating he often added so much of his own, that the Latin text frequently afforded only the subject, on which he wrote most interesting essays, as may be seen in his first work, Boethius de Consolatione Philosophiæ.

1. Boethius was probably finished about A. D. 888. In his preface, he thus speaks of his book and of his other occupations:—Ælfred, Cyning [MS. Kuning] wæs wealhstōd disse bēc, and hie of bēc Lēdene on Englisc wende ... swā swā he hit ða sweetolost and andgitfulcōst gecreacan mihte, for ðæm mistlicum and manigfealdum weoruld bişgum, ðe hine oft ægðer ge on mōde ge on lichoman bişgodan. Ða bişgu us sint swīde earefōp rīme, ðe on his dagum on ða ricu becōmon, ðe he underfangen hæfde; and ðeāh, ða he ðas bōc hæfde geleornode, and of Lēdene to Englisum spelle gewende, and geworhte hī eft to leōde, swā swā heō nū gedōn is king Alfred was translator of this book, and turned it from book Latin into English ... as he the most plainly and most clearly could explain it, for the various and manifold worldly occupations, which often busied him both in mind and in body. The occupations are to us very difficult to be numbered, which in his days came upon the kingdoms which he had undertaken; and yet, when he had learned this book, and turned it from Latin into the English language, he afterwards put it into verse, as it is now done, Bt. proem; Fox viii. 1–10.

2. Alfred, having supplied his people with a work on morality in Boethius, next translates for them the Historia Anglorum of his learned countryman Bede, about A. D. 890. This was the king's work, for the Church says in Ælfric's Homilies, about A. D. 990,—Historia Anglorum 'ða ðe Ælfred cyning of Lēdene on Englisc awende Historia Anglorum, which king Alfred turned from Latin into English', Homl. Th. ii. 116, 30–118, 1.

3. The third book which Alfred translated, about A. D. 893, was the Compendious History of the World, written in Latin by the Spanish monk Orosius in A. D. 416. There is the best evidence, that the voyages of Othhere and Wulfstan were written by the king, for we read that,—Othhere sæde Alfrēde cyninge, dæt he ealra Norþmanna norþmest būde Othhere told king Alfred that he dwelt northmost of all Northmen, Ors. i. 1; Bos. 19, 25. Wulfstan also uses the language of personal narrative,—Burgenda land wæs on us bæcbord we had [lit. there was to us; erat nobis] the land of the Burgundians on our left, Ors. i. 1; Bos. 21, 44. This is the longest and most important specimen of Alfred's own composition.

4. We have undoubted evidence of the date of Alfred's Anglo-Saxon translation of Gregory's Pastoral Care, for the king thus speaks of archbishop Plegmund,—Ic hie geliornode æt Plegmund minum ærcebişcepe I learnt it from Plegmund my archbishop, Introduction to Gregory's Pastoral, Oxford MS. Hatton 20, fol. 2. Plegmund was raised to the archbishopric in 890; Alfred was engaged with the invasion of Hastings till he was conquered in 897; Alfred, therefore, had only leisure to translate the Pastoral between the expulsion of Hastings in 897, and his own death in 901. It was certainly translated by Alfred, for he distinctly states,—Ðā ongan ic, ongemang oðrum mistlicum and manigfealdum bişgum ðisses kynrices, ða bōc wendon on Englisc, ðe is gemenned on Lēden Pastoralis, and on Englisc Hierde bōc, hwilum word be worde, hwilum andgit of andgite then began I, among other different and manifold affairs of this kingdom, to turn into English the book, which is called in Latin Pastoralis, and in English Herdman's book, sometimes word for word, and sometimes meaning for meaning, Oxford MS. Hatton 20, fol. 2.

ælf-fremd, æl-fremed; adj. Strange, foreign; alienus, alienigena—Bearn ælfremde, Ps. Spl. 17, 47; 18, 13; 107, 10; 82, 6; Lk. Bos. 17, 18.

ÆLFRIČ, es; m. [ælf, ric] Ælfric; Ælficus. 1. Ælfric of Canterbury, the grammarian, was of noble birth, supposed to be the son of the earl of Kent. He was a scholar of Athelwold, at Abingdon, about 960. When Athelwold was made bishop of Winchester, he took Ælfric with him and made him a priest of his cathedral. Ælfric left Winchester about 988 for Cerne in Dorsetshire, where an abbey was established by Æthelmær. Ic Ælfric, munuc and mæssepreōst ... wearþ asend, on Ædelrēdes dæge cyninges, fram Ælfeāge bişcope, Adewoldes æftergan, to sumum mynstre, ðe is Cernel gehaten, þurh Æthelmæres bene dæs þegenes I Ælfric, monk and mass-priest ... was sent, in king Æthelred's day, from bishop Ælfeah, Æthelwold's successor, to a minster, which is called Cerne, at the prayer of Æthelmær the thane, Homl. Th. i. 2, 1–5. He is said to have been bishop of Wilton, and he was elected archbishop of Canterbury. A. D. 995, Hēr Siric arcebişceop forþferde, and Ælfric, Wiltunscire biseop wearþ gecoren on Easterdæi on Ambresbyri, fram Æðelræde cinge, and fram eallan his witan in this year, A.D. 995, archbishop Sigeric died, and Ælfric, bishop of Wiltshire, was chosen on Easter-day at Amesbury, by king Æthelred, and all his witan, Chr. 995; Th. 243, 36, col. 2—245, 3, col. 2. This Ælfric was a very wise man, so that there was no more sagacious man in England. Then went Ælfric to his archiepiscopal see, and when he came thither, he was received by those men in orders, who of all were most distasteful to him, that was, by clerks, Chr. 995; Th. ii. 106, 20—24. Ælfric speaks strongly against the transubstantiation in the Eucharist, which gave his Homilies so great an importance in the eyes of the English reformers: v. hüsel. He died A.D. 1006, Hēr forþfærde Ælfric arcebiſceop in this year, archbishop Ælfric died, Chr. 1006; Th. 255, 35, col. 2. The preceding is the most probable biography of Ælfric, archbishop of Canterbury. Others have been written in Pref. to Homl. Th. i. pp. v—x: Lchdm. iii. pref. pp. xiv—xxix, etc. A list of his numerous books is given in Wright's Biographia Britannica Literaria, A. Sax. Period, pp. 485—494, and in Homl. Th. i. pp. vii—ix. 2. Ælfric Bata was the pupil of the preceding Ælfric, the grammarian. In the title of the MS. in St. John's College, Oxford, we read,—“Hanc sententiam Latini sermonis olim Ælfricus abbas composuit, qui meus fuit magister, sed tamen ego Ælfric Bata multas postea huic addidi appendices,” Wanl. Catal. p. 105, 4—7. It appears that in the time of Lanfranc, when the newest Romish doctrines relating to transubstantiation etc. were imposed upon the English Church by the Norman prelates, Ælfric Bata was regarded as an opponent of that doctrine, Wrt. Biog. Brit. A. Sax. p. 497.

æstel, es; m. A tablet, a table for notes, a waxed tablet; indicatorium, astula, pugillaris. Du Cange says astula = tabula sectilis, referring to pugillares, under which he gives the following quotation from Cassander in Liturgicis, p. 53,—‘Inter instrumenta sacra numerantur pugillares aurei sive argentei. . . Proprie pugillares sunt tabulæ, in quibus scribi consuevit, quæ Græcè μνακίδια dicuntur.’ In St. Luke i. 63, αἱ ἱστοὶ μνακίδιον, postulans pugillarem, is in the A. Sax. Gospels, gebedenum wex-brede a waxed tablet being asked for. William of Malmesbury may have alluded to one of these waxed tablets in Gesta Reg. ii. § 123,—‘Cum pugillari aureo in quo est manca auri.’ It is most probable then that Alfred’s æstel consisted of two waxed tablets, joined together by a hinge, and framed or covered with gold to the value of fifty mancuses. When these waxed tablets were closed, being framed or covered with gold, they would have a splendid and costly appearance, worthy the gift of a king:—Æstel indicatorium, Ælfic. After I had then learned it, so that I understood it as well as my understanding would allow me, I translated it into English, and I will send one copy to each bishop’s see in my kingdom; and on each one there shall be one tablet, which shall be worth fifty mancuses. And in God’s name, I command that no man take the tablet from the book, nor the book from the minster, Past. Hat. MS. Pref.

On hand āgan to deliver in hand, Ors. 3, 11? Āgan ūt to have or find out. Lett āgan ūt, hū fela permit to find out, how many, Chr. 1085; Th. 353, 5. [Āgan is the first of the following twelve Anglo-Saxon verbs,—āgan, cunnan, dagan, durrān, magan, mōtan, munan, nagan, sculan, þurfān, unnan, witan, which are called präterito-præsentia, because they take their new infinitives and their present tenses from the perfects of strong verbs with their inflections. These new infinitives form their p. tenses regularly in accordance with the weak conjugations. Thus, the new infinitive āgan has pres. ic, he āh = āg, pl. āgon; p. āhte = āgde, pl. āhton = āgdon. The inf. āgan and the pres. āh, pl. āgon [for igon], retaining präterite inflections, are taken from the p. of a strong verb, ascertained from āh [Goth. āih], which shews the ā of the p. singular in the eighth class of Grimm's division of strong verbs [Grn. i. p. 837; Koch i. p. 253], and requires by analogy, with other verbs of the same class, the inf. igan, the p. pl. igon, and the pp. igen. Thus we find the original verb igan; p. āh, pl. igon; pp. igen. But in āgan the ā of the singular inf. is kept in the pl. inf. and pp. The weak p. āhte = āgde, pl. āhton = āgdon are formed regularly from the weak inf. āgan. The same präterito-præsent may be generally observed in the following cognate words:—

alor, aler, alr, es; m. An alder-tree, called ELLER and ALLER; alnus; alnus glutinosa, Lin. The alder, or rather aler, is an inhabitant of swamps and meadows in all Europe, the north of Africa and Asia, and North America. Its favourite station is by the side of rivulets, or in the elevated parts of marshy land where the soil is drained. Its juice contains a great abundance of tannin, which renders the bark valuable for tanning, and the young shoots for dyeing. Its foliage being large, and of a deep handsome green, the alder is rather an ornamental tree. an I give, Alfd. Will 14, 4; he gives, Cd. 141; Th. 176, 22; Gen. 2915. v. unnan.

an-is used in composition.

I. for A. Sax. and against, in return; contra, re-; as an-sacan to strive against, to contradict; repugnare, contradicere: an-swarian to answer; respondere.

II. for un-, denoting privation; as an-bindan to unbind; absolvere. III. for on, in, in, to; as an-wadan to invade; invadere: an-fōn to take to one's self; accipere. Sometimes an- appears scarcely to alter the meaning of the word before which it is placed.

-an, -anne, v. -anne, in alphabetical order, and ro; prep. IV. The termination of most Anglo-Saxon verbs is in -an; but -ān is found, which seems to be contracted from aa, agan, ahan, as,—gān to go, from gaan: smēan to consider, from smeagan: slēan to slay, from sleahan, etc. The termination of verbs in -ōn, appears to be a contraction from ahan, ohan, as,—fōn to take, from fahan: gefeōn to rejoice, from gefeoahan: teōn to draw, from teoahan, etc. Mrch. 5, 247*.

ÂN, I. m. f. n. one; unus, una, unum; gen. m. n. ānes; f. ānre of one; unius; dat. m. n. ānum; f. ānre to one; uni; acc. m. ānne, āenne; f. āne, n. ān one; unum, unam, unum; instr. m. n. āne; f. ānre with one; uno, unā, uno; pl. nom. am. f. n. āne each, every one, all; unus-quisque, una-quæque, unum-quodque; singuli, æ, a; gen. m. f. n. ānra of every one, all; singulorum, arum, orum; dat. m. f. n. ānum to every one, all; singulis; instr. ānum with all; def. se ānā; seō, ðæt āne the one; gen. dæs, dære, dæs ānan of the one; dat. ðam, dære, ðam ānan to the one; acc. done, ða ānan, ðæt ān the one; instr. m. n. ðý ānan; f. dære ānan with the one; adj:—Ān of ðam unus ex illis, Mt. Bos. 10, 29. Ān wæs on Ispania one was in Spain, Ors. 4, 9; Bos. 92, 19. God geworhte āenne mannan, Adam, of lāme God created one man, Adam, of earth, Homl. Th. i. 12, 28. He is ān God Deus unus est, Mk. Bos. 12, 29. Ðis is ān ðara geræðnessa this is one of the ordinances, L. Eth. ix. 1; Th. i. 340, 2.

II. alone, only, sole, another; solus, alius: with these meanings it is used definitely, and generally written āna, m. and sometimes aina, ānna, ānga, q. v.:—Ān God ys gōd God alone is good; solus [unus] est bonus, Deus, Mt. Bos. 19, 17. Ðæt ge forlæton me ānne, and ic ne eom āna ut me solum relinquis, et non sum solus, Jn. Bos. 16, 32. God āna wāt hū his gecynde biþ, wiðhādes ðe weres God alone knows how its sex is, [the sex of] female or male, Exon. 61 a; Th. 223, 6; Ph. 355. Ðæt ge aina [ge ā mā, Grn.] gebrōðra hæfdon quod alium haberetis vos fratrem, Gen. 43, 6.

2. sole, alone of its kind, singular, unique, without an equal; unicus, eximius:—Ān sunu, mære meotudes bearn the only Son, illustrious child of the Creator, Exon. 128 a; Th. 492, 7; Rā. 81, 10; Hy. 8, 14; Hy. Grn. ii. 290, 14; Bt. Met. Fox 21, 19, 25, 32; Met. 21, 10, 13, 16. Ðæt wæs ān foran eald-gestreōna that was before a singular old treasure, Beo. Th. 2920; B. 1458. Ðæt wæs ān cýning, æghwæs orleāhtre that was a singular king, faultless in everything, 3775; B. 1885.

III. a certain one, some one; quidam; v. sum:—Ān man hæfde twegen suna homo quidam habebat duos filios, Mt. Bos. 21, 28. In this sense it is used as sum in the parallel passage.—Sum man hæfde twegen suna homo quidam habuit duos filios, Lk. Bos. 15, 11. 2. sometimes, though rarely, ān may be used as the English article a, an. It does not, however, appear to be generally used as an indefinite article, but more like the Moes. ain, or the Lat. unus.—When a noun was used indefinitely by the Saxons, it was without an article prefixed; as,—Peodric was Cristen Theoderic was a Christian, Bt. 1; Fox 2, 7.

3. in the following examples it seems to be used for the indefinite article a, an:—Ân engel bodade ðam hyrdum ðæs heofonlican cyninges acennednyse an angel announced to the shepherds the birth of the heavenly king, Homl. Th. i. 38, 3. Ðar beo ân mann stonde there shall be a man standing, Chr. 1031; Ing. 206, 5; Erl. 162, 7. Ða stôð ðar ân Iudeisc wer, ðæs nama was Nichodêmus then stood there a Jewish man, whose name was Nicodemus, Nicod. 11; Thw. 5, 38. On ânnum reste-dæge on a rest-day or sabbath, Lk. Bos. 24, 1; Jn. Bos. 20, 1. Seollon ænne timan gebidan must wait [abide] a time, L. C. E. 18; Th. i. 370, 18; Ors. 3, 7; Bos. 61, 36. Wirc ðe nû ænne arc now make for thee an ark, Gen. 6, 14. Âne lytle hwile a little while, Bt. 7, 1; Fox 16, 4. Cynric ofslôgon ænne Bryttiscne cyning Cynric slew a British king, Chr. 508; Ing. 21, 6.

IV. each, every one, all; unus-quisque, una-quæque, unum-quodque; singuli, æ, a. It is in this sense that it admits of a plural form: nom. acc. pl. m. f. n. âne; gen. m. f. n. ânra; dat. m. f. n. ânnum:—Ânra gehwâ, ânra gehwylc every one, or, literally, every one of all. Swelte ânra gehwile for his âgenum gylte unusquisque pro peccato suo morietur, Deut. 24, 16. Ânes hwæt, Bt. 18, 3; Fox 64, 30, denotes anything, literally 'anything of all', and is used adverbially for at all, in any degree. ¶ One, other.—Ân æfter ânnum one after another, Jn. Uton gewyrcean mannian to ðre anlicnysse and to ðre gelicnysse faciamus hominem ad imaginem nostram et similitudinem nostram, 11; Norm. 18, 14, 20, 21, 25. God worhte Adam to his anlicnysse. On hwilcum dæle hæfþ se man Godes anlicnysse on him? On ðære sǣwe, nā on ðam lichaman. Ðæs mannes sǣwl hæfþ on hire gecynde ðære Hālgan Þrýnnysse anlicnysse; forðan ðe heo hæfþ on hire preo þing, ðæt is gemynd, and andgit and willa God made Adam in his own likeness. In which part has man the likeness of God in him? In the soul, not in the body. The soul of man has in its nature a likeness to the Holy Trinity; for it has in it three things, these are memory, and understanding, and will, Homl. Th. i. 288, 14–19.

THE sound of b is produced by the lips; hence it is called a labial consonant, and has the same sound in Anglo-Saxon as in English. In all languages, and especially in the dialects of cognate languages, the letters employing the same organs of utterance are continually interchanged. In Anglo-Saxon, therefore, we find that b interchanges with the other labials, f and p:—Ic hæbbe I have, he hæfþ he hath. When words are transferred into modern English, b is sometimes represented by f or v:—Beber or befor a beaver; Ober, ofer, over.

2. In comparing the Anglo-Saxon aspirated labial f with the corresponding letter in Old Saxon, the sister dialect, we find that the Old Saxons used a softer aspirated labial þ = bh. This softer aspirated þ generally occurs as a medial letter between two vowels; as,—

O. Sax.	A. Sax.	Eng.
graban	= grafan	= engrave
klioban	= cleofan	= cleave
geban	= gifan	= give

3. The Runic letter ᚷ not only stands for the letter B, b, but also for the name of the letter in Anglo-Saxon beorc the birch-tree. v. beorc.

Babilôn, e; f. Babilônîe, Babilônige, an; f. Babilôn, Babylôn, es; f. [v. wim-man, es; f.] Babylon; Babylôn, ônis; f. This celebrated city of antiquity, in Mesopotamia, was built on both banks of the Euphrates. Its foundation by Nimrod is mentioned immediately after the Deluge, Gen. 10, 9, 10: 11, 9:—Nimrod [MS. Membrad], se ent, ongan ærest timbrian Babilônia; and Ninus, se cuning æfter him, and Same-ramis, his cwên, hî ge-endeade æfter him, on middewardum hire rice. Seó burh was getimbrod on fildum lande, and on swide emnum. And heó was swide læger on to lóciante, and heó is swide rihte feówerscýte. And ðæs wealles mycelnyss and fæstnyss, is ungelyfedlic to secgenne: ðæt he is l elna brád, and ii hund elna heáh, and his ymbgang is hund seofantig mîla, and seofepan dæl ænre mîle. . . Seó ylice burh Babylônia, seó ðe mæst was, and ærest calra burga, seó is nū læst and wæstast Nimrod, the giant, first began to build Babylon; and, after him, king Ninus, and then Semiramis, his queen, finished it in the middle of her reign. The city was built on open and very level land. It was very fair to look upon, and it is quite a true square. The greatness and firmness of the wall, when stated, is hardly to be believed. It is fifty ells broad, and two hundred ells high, and its circumference is seventy miles, and the seventh part of a mile. . . This very city of the Babylonians, which was the greatest and first of all cities, is now the least and most desolate, Ors. 2, 4; Bos. 44, 17–31. BEÓR, es; m. I. BEER, nourishing or strong drink; cerevisia, siccra. Beer, made from malted barley, was the favourite drink of the Anglo-Saxons. In their drinking parties, they pledged each other in large cups, round at the bottom, which must be emptied before they could be laid down, hence perhaps the name of a tumbler. We are speaking of the earliest times, for beer is mentioned in Beowulf:—Gebeótedon beóre druncne oret-mecgas, ðæt hie in beór-sele biðan woldon Grendles gūde the sons of conflict, drunk with beer, promised that they would await in the beer-hall the attack of Grendel, Beo. Th. 965; B. 480. Æt beóre at the beer, 4088; B. 2041. Beor was the common drink of the Anglo-Saxons, hence a convivial party was called Gebeórsceipe, q. v. a place of entertainment, beórsele a beer-hall, or beórtūn a beer-enclosure. Hence also the other compounds, as beór-sealc a beer-serving, beór-setl a beer-bench or settle, and beór-þegu a beer-serving. The following remark seems to be as applicable to the Anglo-Saxons as to the Icelanders,—Ol heitir með mönnum, en með Ásum bjór ale is called, by men and by gods, BEER, Alvismál.—Beóre druncen drunk with beer, Beo. Th. 1066; B. 531; Exon. 72b; Th. 271, 22; Jul. 486. He ne drinþ wīn ne beór vinum et siceram non bibet, Lk. Bos. 1, 15; Deut. 14, 26. Ðæt mon geselle twelf seoxtres beóras that they give twelve sisters of beer, Th. Diplm. A. Beormas; gen. a; pl. m. The Biarmians.—The Biarmians inhabited the country on the shores of the White Sea, north-west of the river Dwina. Alfred calls them Beormas. They were called Biarmians by Icelandic historians, and Permiaki by the Russians, and now Permians. In the Middle Ages, the Scandinavian pirates gave the name of Permia to the whole country between the White Sea and the Ural, Malte-Brun's Univer. Geog. vol. vi. p. 419. In an Icelandic MS. on geography, written in the 14th century, Beormia and two Cwenlands are located together. Kvenlônd II, ok ero þau norþr frá Bjarmalandi. Beó-wulf, es; m. [= Beado-wulf a war-wolf, = Icel. Böðúlfr a war-wulf] BEOWULF, a celebrated warrior of the Scyldings' race, a record of whose heroic deeds is given in the Anglo-Saxon poem bearing his name. It appears most probable that Beowulf was originally an Old Norse heathen Saga, written in the language common at the earliest age in Denmark, Sweden, and Norway, but now only spoken in Iceland. This Saga it is hoped may yet be found in some Swedish library. The story informs us that Hrothgar built a splendid palace at Heorot in the north of Jutland. This palace was soon made a scene of slaughter, in consequence of the nightly attacks of a monster called Grendel, who carried off at one time no less than thirty thanes, for the purpose of devouring them in his retreat. These dreadful visitations are continued during a period of twelve years. Intelligence of this calamity having reached the heroic Beowulf, a relation of Hrothgar, Beowulf resolves to rid the Danish land of this monster; and, in pursuance of this design, sails from home with a company of fifteen warriors. In terrific conflicts he kills Grendel and his mother.—It was the first heroic poem by any Germanic nation, and must have been translated into Anglo-Saxon by a Christian, as is evident by Grendel's mother being spoken of as a descendant of Cain, and numerous Christian allusions, when the Danish sovereignty in England was at its height, perhaps in the reign of Canute, about A.D. 1020. If it were originally written in the Old Norse or Icelandic the Saga would be called Böðúlfr, and the translator into Anglo-Saxon would naturally write it Beado-wulf contracted to Beó-wulf:—

Beowulf was renowned,
the glory of Scyld's offspring widely spread in the Swedish lands.

[Hrothgar] occupied Heorot,
the richly variegated seat.

[Grendel] the fell wretch;
a deadly wound was manifest
in his shoulder,
the sinews sprang asunder,
the bone-inclosures burst:
to Beowulf
warlike fierceness was given;
Grendel, death-sick,
must thence flee.

The War-Goths' lord
seized then by the shoulder
Grendel's mother.
Then the fierce warrior dragged the mortal foe,
so that she bowed on the place:

-- the falchion passed through all her fated carcase,
she sank on the ground.

[blōt a sacrifice, mōnap month] November, the month of sacrifice, so called because at this season the heathen Saxons made a provision for winter, and offered in sacrifice many of the animals they then killed. In an account of the Saxon months, it is thus described:—Se mōnap is nemned on Lēden Novembris, and on ūre geþeode blōtmōnap, forðon ūre yldran, ða hý hæðene wæron, on ðam mōnþe hý bléoton ā, ðæt is, ðæt hý bættæhton and benēmdon hyra deófolgyldum ða neát ða ðe hý woldon syllan this month is called Novembris in Latin, and in our language the month of sacrifice, because our forefathers, when they were heathens, always sacrificed in this month, that is, that they took and devoted to their idols the cattle which they wished to offer, Hick. Thes. i. 219, 56–58: Menol. Fox 387; Men. 195.

2. for the books which a priest ought to possess, v. mæsse-prēost, 2; for his canonical hours, v. 3. [Chauc. booke: Laym. boc, bac, f: Orm. boc: Plat. book, n: O. Sax. bōk, n. f: Frs. bok, f; boek, n: O. Frs. bok, f. n: Dut. boek, n: Ger. buch, n: M. H. Ger. buoch, n: O. H. Ger. bōh, n: Goth. boka, f: Dan. bog, c: Swed. bok, f: Icel. bók, f: O. Slav. bukva, f. All these words have evidently the same origin. Wormius, Saxo, Junius, etc. suppose that as bōc denotes a beech-tree, as well as a book, in the latter case it was used in reference to the material from which the Northern nations first made their books. Wormius infers, that pieces of wood, cut from the beech-tree, were the ancient Northern books, Lit. Run. p. 6. Saxo Grammaticus states, that Fengo's ambassadors took with them letters engraved in wood [litteras ligno insculptas], because that was formerly a celebrated material to write upon, Lib. iii. p. 52: Turner's Hist. App. b. ii. ch. 4, n. 25, vol. i. p. 238. Thus the Latin liber, and Greek βίβλος a book, took their origin from the materials of which books were made. Liber originally signified the inner bark of a tree, and βίβλος or βύβλος, an Egyptian plant [Cyperus papyrus, Lin.], which, when divided into lamina and formed into sheets to write upon, was called πάνυπος, hence papyrus paper. Martinus, Stiernhielmius, Wachter, Adelung, etc. rather derive buch, bōc, etc. from bügen to bend or fold in plait, referring to the folded leaves of the parchment. Thus distinguishing these books from their folds. The ancient volumina were denominated from being in rolls, or rolled in the form of cylinders. At the Council of Toledo, in the 8th century, a book was denominated complicamentum, that which is folded. In still earlier times, even one fold of parchment was denominated a book, and Ker. calls a letter puah, and Not. brief puoch, lit. a letter book.] DER. æ-bēc, ærend-bōc, bigspell-, bletsing; Cristes bōc; dōm-, fōr-, gōdspell-, hand-, land-, mæsse-, pistol-, ræding-, sang-, scrift-, siþ-, spel-, traht-, wis-: bōc-æcceras, -cest, -cræft, -cræftig, -ere, -fel, -gestreón, -hord, -hūs, -ian, -land, -lār, -leáf, -lēden, -lic, -rædere, -ræding, -reád, -riht, -scamel, -staf-, tæcing, -talu, -ung.

Brunan burh; gen. Brunan burge; dat. Brunan byrig; f. Brunan-burh, about five miles south-west of Durham, or on the plain between the river Tyne and the Browney, Dr. Guest properly writes 'round Brunan-burh'; v. example 1; Brunæ castellum. [Brunan burh is a pure Anglo-Saxon word, and signifies the castle of Bruna, though in a charter of Athelstan, dated 978, the year after the battle, it is called Bruninga feld, the plain of the Brunings, or the descendants of Bruna, as -ing denotes, v. -ing.—Acta est hæc præfata donatio anno ab incarnatione Domini nostri Jesu Christi dccccxxxviii, in quo anno bellum factum est in loco qui Bruninga feld dicitur, ubi Anglis victoria data est de cælo, Th. Diplm. 186, 34–37; Cod. Dipl. 374; A. D. 938; Kmbl. ii. 210, 33–37. Brunanburh was written by Ingulf, in A. D. 1109, Brunford; Hunt. in 1148, Brumesburh, Brunesburh, Brunesburh, Bruneburh; Hovd. in 1204, Brunnanbyrig, Brumenburh: Brom. in 1330, Brunneburyh.] As the exact place cannot be determined by the name of any large town now existing, it is necessary to enter into the history of the battle, and thus ascertain its most probable locality.—Sihtric, king of Northumbria, which then extended from the Humber to the Frith of Forth [v. Angle], was son of Ingwar, and grandson of Ragnar Lodbrog. Sihtric was baptized and married Athelstan's sister in A. D. 925. He soon put away his wife, and renounced Christianity. Athelstan prepared to attack him for rejecting his sister, but Sihtric died, when Anlaf his son fled to Ireland, and Athelstan added Northumbria to his dominions. All the leaders of the Anglo-Danes and the Welsh were jealous of the increasing power of Athelstan, and combined against him. Anlaf, king of Dublin, commenced the fray by sailing from Ireland with 615 ships, containing about 100 men each, making more than 61,000 men: with this force he entered the Humber. He was joined by the Anglo-Danes, by the Welsh, and by Constantine, his father-in-law, the king of the Scots. Athelstan completely routed the immense army brought against him about Brunan-burh, and became the first king of England. Alfred the Great was king over all the Anglo-Saxons, but by this complete victory Athelstan became the undisputed king over all England [Engla land, q. v.].—The locality of Brunanburh has not yet been determined. It appears to me, it must be north of Beverley, as Athelstan is reported by Ingulf to have visited the tomb of St. John at Beverley, and to have placed his dagger on the altar, making a vow that if victory was granted to him, he would redeem it at a worthy price. The credibility of this story has been questioned; but, whatever doubt may remain, it proves that in the time of Ingulf, A. D. 1109, there was a general impression that Athelstan marched north of Beverley to oppose his invaders, and that, after the victory in the north, on returning to the south, he redeemed his pledge at Beverley by granting many privileges. Anlaf, collecting the remnant of his conquered army, could have no difficulty in returning to his ships in the Humber, as he had to pass through the country of the Anglo-Danes, his friends, and subjects of his late father.—Now all this history indicates that Anlaf marched north to unite his army with that of his father-in-law, Constantine, king of the Scots. Athelstan followed him, and their forces met about Brunanburh. I think it was on the west of Durham. I am led to this conclusion by these facts relating to the battle, and by the Feodarium Prioratus Dunelmensis, published by the Sirtees Society, vol. lviii, in 1872. There is a plain between the rivers Wear and Browney [Brunan éa], and west of Durham, well adapted for a great battle. We find, in the present day, east and west Brandon [Brunan dūn] and Brandon castle, the property of Viscount Boyne. There is still the river Browney [Brunan éa]. In the Feod. Dunelm. compiled about A. D. 1430, we find the name of a river, of persons, and of places mentioned on the west of Durham. We have 'Ultra aquam de Wer usque ad aquam de Brun,' pref. p. lv: p. 192, note. 'De Brune,' 192, 193, note: 194, note. 'Petro de Brandone,' p. 180, note. 'Petrus de Brandone,' 200, note. On looking at the map of the learned Bishop Gibson, in his Anglo-Saxon Chronicle, 4to, 1692, I find he is of my opinion, that Brunanburh was north of Beverley. I cannot, however, discover why he places it to the north of Northumbria. For the reasons I have stated, I believe it was to the south-west of Durham.—Dr. Guest, Master of Caius College, Cambridge, in his excellent work, A History of English Rhythms, 8vo, 1838, gives the following account of this battle.—'In the year 937, was fought the battle of Brunanburh—a battle, that involved more important interests than any, that has ever yet been fought within this Island. It was indeed a battle between races. . . . Round the banner of Athelstan were ranged one hundred thousand Englishmen, and before them was the whole power of Scotland, of Wales, of Cumberland, and of Ireland under Anlaf, king of Dublin, led on by sixty thousand Northmen. The song, which celebrated the victory, is worthy of the effort that gained it. This song is found in all the copies of the Chronicle, but with considerable variations. Price collated three of them: The Dunstan MS. Tib. A. VI; the Abingdon, Tib. B. I; and the Worcester, Tib. B. IV. I have taken copies from all these MSS, and also from the Plegmund MS. in Ben't Library. The Dunstan MS. appears to be by far the most correct transcript of the four. Price formed a text, so as best to suit the convenience of translation. The result might have been foreseen, and is such as little encourages imitation. I shall rather give the text, as it is found in one of these copies—the Dunstan MS. v. Chr. 937; Th. 200, col. 2. Not a word need be altered, to form either good sense or good poetry,' vol. ii. pp. 60, 61. In Mr. Earle's Chronicle, 8vo, 1865, p. 113, note x, are some excellent remarks on this song.—Dr. Guest has arranged the lines according to his system of Rhythm. I have arranged them according to the Anglo-Saxon punctuation, as in the article Beowulf. Dr. Guest's text is given within brackets, when the general orthography, or the word, seemed to require alteration:—

brýten-walda, brýten-wealda, brēten-ānwealda, an; m; brýten-weald, es; m. A powerful ruler or king; præpotens rex. It is affirmed [Kmbl. Sax. Eng. ii. 21, and note 1] that the true meaning of brýten-walda, compounded of walda a ruler, and the adj. brýten, is totally unconnected with Brettas or Bretwalas, the name of the British aborigines; for brýten is derived from breótan to bruise, break, to break into small portions, to disperse; and, when coupled with walda, wealda a ruler, king, means no more than an extensive or powerful king, a king whose power is widely extended. Many similar compounds are found, thus in Exon. 88 a; Th. 331, 28; Vy. 75 we have brýten-cýning a powerful king exactly equivalent to brýten-walda. Brýten-gründ the wide expanse of earth, 13 a; Th. 22, 25; Cri. 357. Brýten-ríce a spacious realm, 54 b; Th. 192, 17; Az. 107. Brýten-wong the spacious world, 13 a; Th. 24, 6; Cri. 380. The uncompounded adj. is used in the same sense. Breótan bold a spacious dwelling, Cd. 228; Th. 308, 3; Sat. 687. Turner thinks that the Bret-walda [Hist. of A. Sax. bk. iii. ch. 5, vol. i. pp. 318 and 378] was a war-king, elected by the other Anglo-Saxon kings and their nobility, as their leader in the time of war. Lappenberg [Th. Lapg. i. 125–129] takes the same view; while Kemble [Sax. Eng. ii. 8–21] opposes both Turner and Lappenberg, asserting that there was not any general ruler or superior war-king elected by the Anglo-Saxons, and that even Bret-walda [q. v.] does not refer to the Britons, that it is so written in only one MS. of the Chr. while each of the five others has the word brýten-, and therefore the word ought to be written as above, brýten-walda. Of these Brýten-waldan the Chronicle names the following eight,—Dý geāre ge-eóde Ecgbriht cing Myrena ríce, and eal ðæt be sýþan Humber was, and he was eahtoða cing, ðe brýten-walda wæs. Ærest wæs Ælle, [Süþ-Seaxna] cing, se ðus mycel ríce hæfde. Se æftera wæs Ceawlin, West-Sexna cing. Se þridra wæs Æðelbriht, Cātwara cing. Se feorþa wæs Rædwald, Eāst-Engla cing: fifta wæs Eādwine, Norþymbra cing: syxta wæs Oswald, ðe æfter him ríxode: seofoda wæs Osweo, Oswardes brōðor: eahtoða Ecgbriht, West-Seaxna cing in this year [A.D. 827] king Ecgbriht subdued the kingdom of the Mercians, and all that was south of the Humber, and he was the eighth king, who was Brýten-walda. The first was Ælle [A.D. 477–514], king of the South-Saxons, who had thus much sway. The second was Ceawlin [A.D. 560–593], king of the West-Saxons. The third was Æthelbriht [A.D. 593–616], king of the men of Kent. The fourth was Rædwald [A.D. 617?–625], king of the East-Angles: the fifth was Eādwine [A.D. 625–635], king of the Northumbrians: the sixth was Oswald [A.D. 635–642], who reigned after him: the seventh was Oswiu [A.D. 642–670], Oswald's brother: the eighth was Ecgbriht [A.D. 800–836], king of the West-Saxons, Chr. 827; Th. 112, 16–34, col. 2, 3; Brýten-, Th. 113, 21; Palgrv. 2. every word has its history by which its introduction and use are best ascertained. Bede tells us [Bk. i. 25, 2] that Ethelbert, king of Kent, married a Christian wife Bertha, a Frankish princess. The queen prepared the way for the friendly reception of Augustine and his missionary followers by Ethelbert in A. D. 597, who was the first to found a school in Kent, and wrote Laws which are said to be asette on Augustines dæge established in the time of Augustine, between A. D. 597 and 604. The cultivation and writing of Anglo-Saxon [English] began with the conversion of Ethelbert. Marriage, and the household arrangements depending upon it, were regulated by the law of the church, and indigenous compound words were formed to express that law,—thus æ law, divine law; Cristes æ Christi lex. Rihte æ legitimum matrimonium, Bd. 4, 5; S. 573, 17. Æw wedlock, marriage, æw-boren lawfully born, born in wedlock: æw-breca, -brica, m. wedlock breaker, an adulterer: æw-fast-man marriage-fast-man, a wedded man, a husband: æw-nian to wed, take a wife.

3. Hūs-bunda, -bonda a wedded man, husband, householder. This compound is one of the oldest in the language. It is found in the interpolated passage of Matt. xx. between vers. 28 and 29. The passage is in all the Anglo-Saxon MSS. of the Gospels, except the interlinear glosses. The Anglo-Saxon is a literal version of the Augustinian MS. in the Bodleian Library, Oxford [Codex August. 857 D. 2, 14], the Old Italic version, from which the text of the Latin vulgate of the Gospels was formed by St. Jerome about A. D. 384. Though we do not know the exact dates when the Gospels were translated from Latin into Anglo-Saxon, Cuthbert assures us that Bede finished the last Gospel, St. John, on May 27, 735, [see Pref. to Goth. and A. Sax. Gos. Bos. pp. ix–xii.] As the three preceding Gospels were most likely translated before St. John, then the following sentence was written before 735. Se hūs-bonda [hūs-bunda in MS. Camb. II, 2, 11] hāte ðe arisan and rýman ðam oðrum the householder bid ðe rise and make room for the other, Notes to Bosworth's Goth. and A. Sax. Gos. Mt. xx. 28, p. 576. Hūs-bonda is also used by Ælfric in his version of the Scriptures about 970, Ex. 3, 22.

4. Bunda, bonda one wedded or bound, a husband, from bindan; p. band, bundon; pp. bunden to bind must have been of earlier origin than the compound hūs-bunda. It is a well-known rule that in Anglo-Saxon a person or agent is denoted by adding a, as býtl a hammer, býtla a hammerer; ánweald rule, government, ánwealda a ruler, governor; bunden, bund bound, bunda, bonda one bound, a husband. Bunda might be banda as well as bonda, for a is often used for o, as mon for man a man. The early use of hūs-bunda, -bonda would at once indicate that it was not likely to be of Norse or Icelandic origin. It could not be derived from the Norse būa to dwell; part. būandi, bōandi dwelling; nor even from the A. Sax. būian to dwell, because the ū and ō are long in the Norse būa to dwell, būandi, bōandi dwelling, and in the A. Sax. būian to dwell, būende dwelling, būend a dweller; while the u and o are always short in bunda and bonda. So, in other compounds, from bindan to bind, as bonde-land bond or leased land, land let on binding conditions. Bunda then is a pure Anglo-Saxon word derived from bindan to bind. Būian to dwell, with the part. būende dwelling, and the noun būend, es; m. a dweller, is quite a distinct word with its own numerous compounds. v. būende, būend, es; m.

BODDINGTON, Gloucestershire*;—Offōron hie ðone here hindan æt Buttingtūne on Sæferne staðe they followed after the army to Boddington on the bank of the Severn, Chr. 894; Erl. 92, 22. Mr. Earle has the following pertinent note on the locality:—Two places have hitherto contended for this site, viz. Boddington near Cheltenham, and Buttington in Montgomeryshire, near Welshpool. But Mr. Ormerod [Archæologia, vol. xxix; and Strigulensia, p. 60] has put forward a claim for Buttinton in Tidenham, on the peninsula formed by the Severn and the Wye. There are traces of works here, though less considerable than those at Buttington in Montgomeryshire. Mr. Ormerod grounds his claim mainly upon Matthew of Westminster's 'paganos tam navali quam terrestri exercitu circumcinxit.' No such thing appears in the text before us, but to the opposite effect. One is almost tempted to suspect that this 'Verwirrer der Geschichte' [as Lappenberg calls Matthew of Westminster] caught sight of 'sciphere' in the next line, and imagined the rest. But it must be allowed, Mr. Ormerod's position has its advantages. It does not, however, suit 'ða up de Saferne,' if this means that they went up stream, which would seem to be its meaning, though not in Florence, Chr. Erl. notes, p. 318.

2. in the districts of England first occupied by the Angles, Saxons, and Jutes, numerous extensive cemeteries of the heathen period have been examined. In these cemeteries the graves are usually arranged in rows, and are dug exactly in the same manner and form as our modern churchyard graves, which are probably copied from them. After the burial, a low circular mound was raised over the grave. From their contents we learn that the body of the deceased was buried in the full dress worn when living,—the men with their arms and military equipments,—the women with their personal ornaments and jewelry. The body was generally laid on its back, on the floor of the grave; but in the wealthier classes, it was frequently inclosed in a wooden coffin, for in A. D. 679, it is said—Æðeldryp on tréwene þruh was bebyriged Ætheldrith was buried in a wooden coffin, Bd. 4, 19; S. 588, 21; or in the Latin of Bede—Æðilthryd ligneo in locello seputa, S. 163, 15.

3. The belief in a future life is shewn by the care with which the relatives and friends of better condition, placed in the grave of the dead objects which it was supposed would be necessary or useful in the next world: even mere personal ornaments, or articles to which the deceased had been attached, or which can only have been placed there as tokens of affectionate remembrance. Evidence is also found of the sentiments of tenderness which followed them to their last resting-place. It was believed that the dead were exposed to evil spirits, for amulets are usually found interred with them,—especially beads of amber, which were thought to be protective against such influences. The frequent occurrence, among the earth in the grave, of bones of animals, which were commonly eaten by the Anglo-Saxons, would seem to shew that there were both sacrifices and feasting at the burial. Human bones have been found in such a position as to justify a supposition, that a slave had been slain and thrown into the grave, perhaps in the belief that he would continue to serve his master in the spiritual world.

4. In the districts which were occupied by the Angles in Britain, and Old Saxons on the continent, уекроуаватя, cremation or the burning of the bodies before burial, appears to have been almost universal, among rude nations, from the age of Homer to that of Alfred. The interment, therefore, consists of an urn filled with the burnt bones. It has been supposed that cremation was originally the mode of burial in use among the Angles; and that the Saxons and Jutes buried the body entire, or that they had adopted this mode of burial when they came into Britain. See Kemble in the Archæological Journal, No. 48. It is recorded of the Estonians and Old Saxons, who were a very warlike and powerful people, once occupying the whole north-west corner of Germany,—And ðæt is mid Æstum þeaw, ðæt ðær sceal ælces geþeodes man beon forbærned; and gyf ðar man æn bân findeþ unforbærned, hi hit sceolon miclum gebetan it is also a custom with the Estonians, that there men of every tribe must be burned; and if any one find a single bone unburnt, they shall make a great atonement, Ors. i, 1; Bos. 23, 3-5. It is certain that in Beowulf, which is supposed to be an Old Norse poem, the body of the hero is described as being burnt:—Hit sæ-lifend syddan hātan Biōwulfes biorh sea-farers may afterwards call it Beowulf's mound [barrow], Beo. Th. 5604-5606; B. 2806, 2807. Him ða gegiredon Geāta leode ād unwāfene, helm-behongen, hilde bordum, and beorhtum byrnum the people of the Goths then raised for him a mighty funeral pile, hung with helmets, shields, and bright breast-plates, 6265-6271; B. 3137-3140. Ongunnon ða bæl-fyra mæst wīgend weccan: wudu-rēc astāh sweart of Swiō-pole then the warriors began to kindle the greatest of bale-fires: the wood-smoke ascended black from the Swedish pine, 6277-6281; B. 3143-3145. 5. It is probable that down to a very late period the people adhered to many of their ancient burial customs. Charlemagne, so late as the year 789, ordered his Christian Saxon subjects to bury their dead in the Christian cemeteries, and not in the tumuli of the pagans, in these words,—Jubenius ut corpora Christianorum Saxonum ad cœmeteria ecclesiæ deferantur, et non ad tumulos paganorum, Capit. Carl. Mag. Walter, tom. ii. p. 107. In England, the ordinary converts appear to have been drawn reluctantly from the burial places of their forefathers by the establishment of Christian cemeteries attached to the churches, and even there they seem long to have continued many of their old rites. A few of these ceremonies are mentioned in the Anglo-Saxon ecclesiastical laws and constitutions relating to funerals.

6. It appears from a regulation, which, though only preserved in the laws of Henry I, evidently belonged to the Anglo-Saxon period, that as soon as any person was dead, the body was laid out, with the feet to the east and the head to the west. This law enjoins any one who, either in revenging a feud or defending himself, should kill a man, not to take anything belonging to him, whether his horse, or his helmet, or his sword, or any money he may have, but to lay out his body in the manner usually observed with the dead, the head to the west and the feet to the east, upon his shield, if he have one; and to fix his lance, and place his arms round, and attach his horse by the reins; and to go to the nearest town and give information to the first person he meets: the Latin of the law is,—Si quis in vindictam vel in se defendendo occidat aliquem, nihil sibi de mortui rebus aliquis usurpet, non equum, non galeam, vel gladium, vel pecuniam prorsus aliquam; sed ipsum corpus solito defunctorum more componat, caput ad occidentem, pedes ad orientem versum, super clipeum, si habeat; et lanceam suam figat, et arma circummittat, et equum adregnet; et adeat proximam villam, et cui prius obviaverit denunciare, L. H. 83, § 6; Th. i. 591.

7. During the time that the dead body remained unburied, the relations and friends assembled to watch or wake over it [this watching or waking is mentioned under the word lic a body, see lic II], and this proceeding was evidently accompanied with feasting and drinking carried to a very great excess. So late as the end of the tenth century, archbishop Ælfric addressed the following injunction to his clergy:—Ge ne scylan fægningan forþ-farenra manna, ne ðæt lic gesēcan, būton eow mann laðige ðær-to: ðæune ge ðær-to geladode sýn, ðonne forbeðe ge ða hæðenan sangas ðæra lāwedra manna, and heora hlifdan cheahchetunga; ne ge sylfe ne eton, ne ne drincan ðær ðæt lic inne līp, ðe-læs ðe ge syndon efen-læce ðas hæðenscypes ðe hý ðær begāþ ye shall not rejoice on account of men deceased, nor attend on the corpse, unless ye be thereto invited: when ye are thereto invited, then forbid ye the heathen songs of the laymen, and their loud cacklings; nor eat ye, nor drink, where the corpse lieth therein, lest ye be imitators of the heathenism which they there commit, L. Ælf. C. 35; Th. ii. 356, 23-358, 5. The clergy gave little attention to these injunctions, for they are warned against being 'hunters of funerals,' and Ælfric tells us how some priests 'Fagniaþ ðonne men forþfarāþ, and unbedene gaderiaþ hi to ðam lice, swā swā grāðige ræmmas, ðar ðar hi hold geseoþ; ac heom gcbirāþ mid rihte to bestandenne ða men, ðe hīraþ into heora mynste; and ne sceal nān faran on ðæres folgoþ to nānum lice būton he gebeden sý rejoice when men depart hence, and unbidden gather about the corpse, like greedy ravens, wherever they see a dead carcase; whereas it properly becomes them to bury those men, who belong to their minster; and no one ought to go in another's following to any corpse unless he be invited,' L. Ælf. P. 49; Th. ii. 386, 2-6.

8. We have no reason for supposing that people who were not rich were buried in coffins, but the body, having been wrapped up in its winding-sheet, appears to have been merely laid in the grave, and then covered with earth. The first coffins used by the converted Anglo-Saxons were undoubtedly of wood [vide 2], and it was the ecclesiastics who introduced the stone sarcophagi for eminent personages of their own order. Sebbi, king of the East-Saxons, was buried in a coffin of stone:—Gearwodan hi his lichoman to bebyrigeanne on stānenre þruh eujus [Sebbi] corpori tumulando præparaverant sarcophagum lapideum, Bd. 4, 11; S. 580, 4.

9. At every funeral a payment, called a soul-sceat [v. sáwel-sceat], was made to the church where the interment took place, and a legacy was also expected. A mancus of gold, or even a much higher sum, was usually paid in the case of a king or bishop, or of a person of high rank. 10. The graves were no doubt arranged in rows and covered with small mounds, as in the older pagan cemeteries, except that the mounds were elongated instead of being circular, and had head-stones. They seem, at an early period, to have been laid north and south, like many of those in the pagan cemeteries, and not east and west, as was the position of the bodies of the nuns of Hartlepool, buried towards the end of the seventh century, which were uncovered about thirty years ago. Small flat stones, the largest less than a foot square, had been laid over the graves at Hartlepool, each bearing a cross, and the name of the person it commemorated; some engraved in Anglo-Saxon runes, and some in the Roman letters of the seventh century, for to the latter end of that period they evidently belonged. v. Thrupp's Anglo-Saxon Home, Svo. 1860, pp. 397-405. A very valuable paper by George Rolleston, Esq. M. D. F. R. S. C

In Gothic and Icelandic c is entirely wanting, being always represented by k. It is remarkable that the Anglo-Saxons have seldom made use of k; but, following the Latin, have preferred the use of c.

1. the letter c is found as an initial, medial, and final.—As an initial letter it corresponds to the Gothic and Icelandic k; as,—A. Sax. corn corn, Goth. kaur, Icel. korn; A. Sax. ceosan to choose, Goth. kisan, Icel. kjósa. As a medial and final letter c corresponds to the Gothic and Icelandic k—thus A. Sax. æcer a field, Goth. akrs, Icel. akr; A. Sax. eac also, Goth. auk, Icel. ok [og].

2. c and cc are often changed into h or hh before s or þ, and especially before t; as, strehton they stretched, for strecton from streccan. Ahsian for acsian or axian to ask; sehþ for sēþ seeks, from sēcan to seek. In words immediately derived from Anglo-Saxon, k is frequently substituted for the Anglo-Saxon c; as, cyning a king; cyn kin or kindred. Sometimes q or ch; as, cwēn queen; cild a child; cin a chin.

3. the Runic letter h not only stands for the letter c, but also for the name of the letter in Anglo-Saxon cēn a torch. v. cēn and RŪN.

Whitby in the care of their cattle in the early part of the seventh century. He is the first person of whom we possess any metrical composition in our vernacular language. So striking and similar are some of his thoughts to Paradise Lost, it has been supposed that Milton had read his Poems. He became a monk of Whitby, and died in the monastery about A. D. 680. A full account is given of him in Bede's History, bk. iv. ch. 24. The origin of his Poem is thus recorded in king Alfred's Anglo-Saxon version of Bede:—Ðā stōð him sum mon æt þurh swefen, and hine hālette and grētte, and hine be his naman nemde, Cædmōn [Cædmōn, Bd. 4, 24; S. 597, 12], sing me hwæt-hwegu. leóp geworhte then stood some man by him in a dream, and hailed and greeted him, and named him by his name, 'Cædmon, canta mihi aliquid,' = Cædmon, sing me something. Then he answered and said, I cannot sing anything . . . Again, he who was speaking with him said, Yet thou must sing to me. Said he, What shall I sing? Said he, Sing me the origin of things. When he received this answer, then he began forthwith to sing, in praise of God the Creator, the verses and the words which he had never heard . . . Then he arose from sleep, and had fast in mind all that he sleeping had sung . . . He first sang of earth's creation, and of the origin of mankind, and all the history of Genesis, and then of the departure of the people of Israel from the Egyptians' land, and of the entrance of the land of promise, and of many other histories of the canonical books of Holy Writ; and of Christ's incarnation, and of his passion, and of his ascension into heaven; and of the coming of the Holy Ghost, and the doctrine of the Apostles; and also of the terror of the doom to come, and the fear of hell-torment, and the sweetness of the heavenly kingdom: he made many poems, Bd. 4, 24; S. 597, 11-18, 25, 26-598, 9-17.

2. Cædmon was first published by Junius, from the Bodleian MS. the only one in existence. Junius published the Anglo-Saxon text only at Amsterdam in 1655, without a translation, in very small 4to, pp. 116. It was again published by B. Thorpe, F.S.A. in large 8vo. 1832, with an English translation, notes, and a verbal index, pp. 341.

C. S. 77; Th. i. 418, 19-22. The Latin version reads: 'Sed suum hordern quod dicere possumus dispensam, et cistam suam, et teage, id est scrinium suum, debet ipsa custodire.' A similar provision is found in the old Scottish law: 'Tamen uxor in certis casibus respondere tenebitur; videlicet, si furtum inveniatur sub clavibus suis quas ipsa habet sub custodia et cura sua, utpote spensæ, arcæ suæ vel scrinii sui. Et si aliquod furtum sub clavibus suis inveniatur, uxor cum viro suo tamquam ei consentaneus erit culpabilis et punietur,' Quon. Attachi. xii. c. 7. There is a republication of the same law in the Stat. Willielmi Regis, with this variation: 'Spensa et arca robarum et jocalium suorum et de scrinio seu coffero,' xix. c. 3. We may therefore, perhaps, render the terms in the quotation above, 'locked up in her store-room, her chest, and her cupboard,' L. Th. i. 418, note b.

With holy oil, ye shall mark heathen children on the breast, and between the shoulders, in the middle, with the sign of the cross, before ye baptize it in the font water; and when it comes from the water, ye shall make the sign of the cross on the head with the holy chrism. In the holy font, before ye baptize them, ye shall pour chrism in the figure of the cross of Christ; and no one may be sprinkled with the font water, after the chrism is poured in, L. Ælf. E. II. in later times crundel is n:—On ðæt crundel to the barrow, Cod. Dipl. 1283; Kmbl. vi. 120, 8. [Kemble, in his Glossary Cod. Dipl. iii. pref. p. xxi, says,—'It seems to denote a sort of water-course, a meadow through which a stream flows.' Yet the following example in this same vol. proves that a crundel could not be a meadow through which a stream flows, as it was on a hill:—Crāwan crundol on Werēðan hylle Crow's crundel on Werēð's hill, Cod. Dipl. 698; A. D. 997; Kmbl. iii. 301, 35. Dipl. 1188; Kmbl. v. 354, 20, 28. The crundel on Werēð's hill militates against Dr. Leo's view, as well as Kemble's; Mr. Thorpe therefore concludes,—'My belief is, that the word is not Anglo-Saxon, nor Germanic, but British, and signifies a tumulus or barrow, and is akin to the Welsh carneddaw a cairn or heap of stones,' Th. Diplm. Glossary, p. 654.] DER. morþ-crundel, stān-

Dydon swā he cūdon they did as they could, Cd. 187; Th. 232, 11; Dan. 258. [Cunnan is the second of the twelve Anglo-Saxon verbs, called praterito-præsentia, given under āgan, q.v. The inf. cunnan and the pres. can, pl. cunnen, retaining preterite inflections, are taken from the p. of the strong verb cinnan, ascertained from can, pl. cunnen, which shews the ablaut or internal change of the vowel in the p. tense of the twelfth class of Grimm's division of strong verbs [Grm. i. edn. 2, p. 898; Koch, i. p. 252], and requires, by analogy with other verbs of the same class, the inf. cinnan, q.v. and the pp. cunnen. Thus we find the original verb cinnan, p. can, pl. cunnen; pp. cunnen. The weak p. cūde, pl. cūdon, for cunde, cundon, is formed regularly from the inf. cunnan. The pp. generally takes the weak form, in Anglo-Saxon as well as in the cognate words; but strong and weak forms are both found, in A.Sax. the strong on-cunnen, and the weak cūþ, and in M.H.Ger. the strong ver-kunnen, and the weak kunt. The same praterito-præsentia may be generally observed in the following cognate words:—

Cwēn-land, es; n. Cwēn-land lies between the White Sea [Cwēn Sæ] and Norway, north of the Gulf of Bothnia. The country east and west of the Gulf of Bothnia, from Norway to the Cwēn or White Sea, including Finmark on the north. Malte-Brun says that the inhabitants of Cwēn-land were a Finnish race. They were called Quaines, and by Latin writers Cayani. Gerchau maintains, in his history of Finland, 1810, that the Laplanders only were called Finns, and that they were driven from the country by the Quaines. 'They settled in Lapland, and on the shores of the White Sea, which derived from them the name of Quen Sea or Quen-vik.' ... Adamus Bremensis happened to be present at a conversation, in which king Swen spoke of Quen-land or Quena-land, the country of the Quaines, but as the stranger's knowledge of Danish was very imperfect, he supposed the king had said Quinna-land, the country of women or Amazons; hence the absurd origin of his Terra Feminarum, mistaking the name of the country, for quinna a woman. Malte-Brun's Universal Geog. Edin. 1827, vol. vi. p. 495.—Dr. Latham's Germania of Tacitus, 174, 179:—Swēon habbaþ be sūþan him done sæs earm Osti; and be eāstan him Sermede; and be norþan him ofer ða wēstennu is Cwēn-land the Swedes have, to the south of them, the Estonian arm of the sea; and to the east of them the Sermede; and to the north of them, over the wastes, is Cwēn-land, Ors. 1, 1; Bos. 19, 21-23: 21, 10.

Camden and, after him, Gibson say, in the preceding Latin, this place was near Wittering on the coast of Sussex. They rely on a Charter which Kemble [Cod. Dipl. 992] has marked as spurious, but which was no doubt constructed with a regard for probability. In this Charter [Cod. Dipl. 992; A. D. 683; Kmbl. v. 33, 22] the name occurs as Cumenes-hora, a form which countenances Ingram's guess that Shoreham is the place; quasi Cymenesshoreham, v. Chr. Erl. 281, A. D. 477.—Hēr, A. Cynewulf, es; m. An Anglo-Saxon poet, who has preserved his name in Runes, in his poem on Elene's Recovery of the Cross. Mr. Kemble will best describe his own discovery.—In the Vercelli MS. is contained a long poem on the finding of the Cross by the Empress Helena [= Elene]. After the close of the poem, and apparently intended as a tail-piece to the whole book, comes a poetical passage, in which the author principally refers to himself, and after a reference to his own increasing age and the change from the strength and joyousness of youth, he breaks out, in the 15th Canto, into a moralizing strain, in which he concludes his work. The following thirty lines, containing Runes, form a portion of this Canto:—

Ever was contest till then, with waves of sorrow tossed

C [the torch] sinking,
though he, in meadhall
treasures, handled
appled gold,

Y [sorrow] he mourned,
N [need] his consort,
narrow sorrow he suffered,
a close rune,
where E [the horse] before him measured the mile-paths, proudly hastened with wires adorned.

W [hope] is overpowered,
my joy in my old age,
youth is turned back
my old pride.

U I was of old
a gleam of youth,
now are the days of my life
after the appointed space departed, the joy of life flowed away,
as L [lake or water] glideth,
the floods that hasten.

F [wealth] will be for every man failing under the heaven, the ornament of the land
will depart under the welkin.

The extreme rudeness and abruptness of these lines, and the apparent uselessness of the Runes, led me to suspect that there was more in them than merely met the eye. This I found to be the case; for, on taking the Runes out of the context, using them as single letters and uniting them in one word, they supplied me with the name CYNEWULF, undoubtedly no other than the author of the poems. I cannot here bestow space upon a long argument to shew who this Cynewulf was. I believe him to have been the Abbot of Peterborough of that name, who flourished in the beginning of the eleventh century, who was accounted in his own day a celebrated poet, both in Latin and Anglo-Saxon, whose works have long been lost, but whose childish ingenuity has now enabled us with some probability to assign to him the authorship of the Vercelli and Exeter Codices, Archæologia, vol. xxviii. 1840, by Kemble, pp. 327-372. The Reverend Jn. Earle, M. A. etc. Rector of Swanswick, with some pertinent remarks, supposes Cynewulf to be the same person as Cyneweard. v. Chr. Erl. Introduction, pp. xx-xxii.

cyning, cyng, es; m. [cyn people, -ing originating from, son of]. I. a king, ruler, emperor; rex, imperator. He is the representation of the people, and springs from them, as a son does from his parents. The Anglo-Saxon king was elected from the people; he was, therefore, the king of the people. He was the chosen representative of the people, their embodiment, the child, not the father of the people. He was not the lord of the soil, but the leader of his people. He completed the order of freemen, and was the summit of his class. As the freeman [ceorl] was to the noble [ædele], so was the noble to the king. The Anglo-Saxon king was the king of a tribe or of a people, but never of the land. We read of kings of the West Saxons or of the Mercians, but not of Wessex or of Mercia. The king was, in truth, essentially one with the people, by them and their power he reigned; but his land was like theirs, private property. It was not the feudal system, and was never admitted that the king was owner of all the land in a country:—Se cyning mildlice onfeng the king received [him] gladly, Ors. 1, 8; Bos. 30, 44. II. Anglo-Saxon kings were at first elected from a family or class, by Witena gemōt the assembly of the wise. 2. fidelity was sworn to them by the people, in the following words:—Ðus man sceal swerigean hyld-āpas. 'On ðone Drihten, ðe ðes hālgdōm is fōre hālig, ic wille beōn N. hold and getrīwe, and eal lufian ðæt he lufað, and eal ascūnian ðæt he ascūnaþ, æfter Godes rihte and æfter woroldgerysnum, and nǣfre, willes ne gewældes, wordes ne weorces, ǫwiht dōn ðæs him lāpre biþ; wið ðam ðe he me healde swā ic earnian wille, and eall ðæt læste ðæt uncer fōrmæl wæs, ðā ic to him gebeāh and his willan geceās thus shall a man swear oaths of fidelity [or homage]. By the Lord, before whom this relic is holy, I will be to N. faithful and true, and love all that he loves, and shun all that he shuns, according to God's law, and according to the world's principles, and never, by will nor by force, by word nor by deed, do aught of what is loathful to him; on condition that he keep me as I am willing to deserve, and all that fulfil that our agreement was, when I submitted to him and chose his will,' L. O. 1; Th. i. 178, 2-9.

If this was taken in A. D. 924, it was not long before the power of the king was limited, for we have the following oath administered to Ædelrēd, when he was consecrated king at Kingston in A. D. 978, as is stated in the Chronicle,—On ðys geāre wæs Ædelrēd to cininge gehālgod æt Cinges tūne in this year Æthelred was consecrated king at Kingston, Chr. 978 [MS. 979]; Th. 234, 9, col. 1.

3. the king took a corresponding oath to his people. The words of the king's oath are,—Dis gewrit is gewriten, stæf be stæfe, be ðam gewrite ðe Dūnstān arcēbisceop sealde ūrum hlāforde æt Cinges tūne ā on dæg ðā hine man hālgode to cinge, and forbeād him ælc wedd to syllanne būtan ðysan wedde, ðe he up on Cristes weofod lēde, swā se bisceop him dihte. 'On ðære hālgan Frýnnesse naman, Ic preō þing behāte cristenum folce, and me underþeoddum:—An ærest, ðæt ic Godes cyrice and eall cristen folc mīnra gewearma sōðe sibbe healde. Oðer is, ðæt ic reāflīc and ealle unrihte þing eallum hādum forbeōde. Þridde, ðæt ic behāte and bebeōde on eallum dōmum riht and mildheortnisse, ðæt us eallum ærfæst and mildheort God purh ðæt his ēcean miltse forǵite, se lifaþ and rixað' this writing is copied, letter for letter, from the writing which archbishop Dunstan delivered to our lord at Kingston on the very day when he was consecrated king, and he forbade him to give any other pledge but this pledge which he laid upon Christ's altar, as the bishop instructed him. 'In the name of the Holy Trinity, three things do I promise to this christian people, my subjects. First, that I will hold God's church and all the christian people of my realm in true peace. Second, that I will forbid rapine and all injustice to men of all conditions. Third, that I promise and enjoin justice and mercy in all judgments, whereby the just and merciful God may give us all his eternal favour, who liveth and reigneth,' Relq. Ant. W. ii. 194.

4. from the freedom with which the educated spoke of the Doom's Day Survey of William the Conqueror, indicating their love of freedom, we have no reason to suppose this oath was the first oath taken by kings in our limited monarchy. The spirit of the monks may be seen in the following extract from the Chronicle:—Willelm, Engla landes cyng, ðe ða wæs sittende on Normandige, forðig he ahte ægðer ge Engla land ge Normandige . . . sende ða ofer eall Engla land into ælcere scire his men . . . Swā swyðe nearwlice he hit lett ut aspyrian, ðæt næs ān ælþig hīde, ne ān gyrdre landes, ne, furdon, hit is sceame to tellanne, ac hit ne puhte him nān sceame to dōnne, ān oxa [MS. oxe], ne ān cū, ne ān swīn næs belyfon, ðæt næs geset on his gewrite, and ealle ða gewrita wæron gebroht to him syððan William, king of England, who was then resident in Normandy, for he owned both England and Normandy . . . then sent his men over all England into each shire . . . So very narrowly did he commission them to trace it out, that there was not one single hide, nor a rood of land, nay, moreover, it is shameful to tell, though he thought it no shame to do it, not an ox, nor a cow, nor a swine was left, that was not set down in his writ, and all the recorded particulars were afterwards brought to him, Chr. 1085; Erl. 218, 2-4 . . . 24, 25 . . . 33-38.

5. the Anglo-Saxon king had royal power to pardon transgressors:—Gif hwā in cynynges healle gefeohte, oððe his wæpn gebrede, and hine mon gefō; siē ðæt on cynynges dōme, swā deāþ, swā lif, swā he him forgifan wille if any one fight in the king's hall, or draw his weapon, and he be taken; be it in the king's power, either death or life, or pardon, L. Alf. pol. 7; Th. i. 66, 8, 9. Siē on cynynges dōme hwæder he lif āge ðe nāge be it in the king's power whether he shall or shall not have life, L. In. 6; Th. i. 106, 3, 4. Būton him cyning [MS. kyning] ārian wille unless the king will be merciful to him, 36; Th. i. 124, 19. ðæt he wære his feores scyldig, būton he cyng gesōhte, and he him his feorh forgifan wolde; eall swā hit ār æt Greātan leā and æt Exan caestre and æt þunres felda gecweden wæs that he should be liable in his life, unless he should flee to the king, and he should give him his life; all as it was before ordained at Greatley and at Exeter and at Thundersfield, L. Ath. v. § 1, 4; Th. i. 230, 6-9; L. Edm. S. 6; Th. i. 250, 11; L. Edg. ii. 7; Th. i. 268, 24, 25; L. Eth. iii. 16; Th. i. 298, 14; vii. 9; Th. i. 330, 24.

6. of all forfeits the king had one half—to healfum:—Fō se cyng to healfum, —to healfum ða men ðe on ðære rāde beon let the king take possession of half, of [the other] half the men, who may be in the riding [shall take possession], L. Ath. i. 20; Th. i. 210, 6, 7.

7. treasure-trove, or treasure or money found, of which the owner was unknown, belonged to the king. It is designated in Anglo-Saxon charters by the words—ealle hordas būfan eorþan, and binnan eorþan all hoards above the earth, and within the earth. As we learn from Beowulf, in early and heathen times, much treasure was buried in the mound raised over the ashes of the dead, besides what was burned with the body:—Hī on beorg dydon bēgas [MS. beg] and siglu, forlētton eorla gestreōd eorþan healdan, gold on greōte, ðær hit nū gēn lifaþ yldum swā unnyt swā hit ār wæs they placed rings and jewels in the mound, they left the treasure of earls to the earth to hold, gold in the dust, where it now yet remains as useless to men as it was before, Beo. Th. 6307-6318; B. 3164-3169. The legend of Guthlac [about A.D. 700, v. Crīland] supplies a very early instance of the search for gold and silver in the mounds:—Wes ðær on ðam eālande sum hlāw mycel ofer eorþan geworht, ðone ylcan men iū geāra for feōs wilnuga gedulfor and brācon: ða wæs ðær on ðære sidan ðæs hlāwes gedolfen swylce mycel wāterseāþ wære there was on the island a great mound raised upon the earth, which some men of yore had dug and broken up in hopes of treasure: then there was dug up on the other side of the mound as it were a great water-pit, Guthl. 4; Gdwin. 26, 4-8.

8. Pastus or Convivium=Cynynges feorm. The king visited different districts personally or by deputy to see that justice was done to all his subjects. In these periodical journeys the king received support and entertainment wherever he went. Hence perhaps the privileges of our judges. In A.D. 814 Cēnwulf released the bishop of Worcester from a pastus of twelve men, whom he was bound to find. This was so great an expense that the exemption was worth an estate of thirteen hides, v. Cod. Dipl. 203; A.D. 814; Kmb. i. 256.

9. Vigilia=heafodweard head ward, or a proper watch set over the king, which he claimed when he came into any district. The sēweard or coast guard was also a regal right, performed by the tenants of those land owners whose estates lay contiguous to the sea.

10. the mint or coinage of money. The king exercised a superintendence over the circulating medium. Ædelræd not only enacted that there should be no moneyers besides the king's, but that their number should be diminished:—Nān man ne āge nāenne mynetere būton cyng let no man have a moneyer except the king, L. Eth. iii. 8; Th. i. 296, 15. Ut monetarii pauciores sint quam antea fuerint, iv. 9; Th. i. 303, 2.
